

This week's DVDs

By MICHAEL GILTZ

The Jetsons/Jonny Quest ★★★½
 Warner Bros., $64.92 each

"The Honeymooners" led to "The Flintstones," which led to "The Jetsons," the space-age family. This contains all 24 episodes from the show's original run in 1962, plus a look at the Jetsons' "futuristic" gadgets. More than 20 years later, they made 51 more episodes, but these are the best.

The Fog of War

★★★

Sony Pictures Classics, $26.96

Filmmaker Errol Morris received a well-deserved Oscar for Best Documentary for this fascinating probing of the mind of Robert McNamara, the secretary of defense under presidents Kennedy and Johnson and self-described war crimes perpetrator. Morris lets McNamara apologize, analyze and forcefully defend his actions during World War II and Vietnam.

Tomorrow

★★★½

HVE, $29.95

This 1972 drama is about a solitary man who takes in a pregnant woman. (Think "Plainsong.") Extras include archival interviews, plus a copy of the William Faulkner short story the movie was based on.

In America

★★★½

Fox, $27.98

A sentimental drama about Irish immigrants making a go of it in New York. It sticks with you mainly because of the women — Samantha Morton (right), as the mom, and especially sisters Sarah and Emma Bolger, as Christy and Ariel, are wonderful.

Have Gun, Will Travel: Complete First Season

★★★½

Paramount, $49.99

This is an entertaining western about hired gun Paladin (Richard Boone) who would sometimes hunt down the people who'd employed him if he thought they were in the wrong. Also new in the every-man-for-himself vein: "Survivor: Complete First Season" (Paramount, $49.99).

The Waltons: Complete First Season

★★★½

Warner Bros., $49.98

A wholesome drama rarely gets respect, whether it's NBC's "Providence," or the classic example that debuted in 1972, "The Waltons." The stories were a bit sappy, but the acting was strong. No extras, but it was the Depression, after all, so maybe they couldn't afford any.
