Robert Leacock

Less zippy than Unzipped, this documentary nominally focuses on supermodel Christy Turlington (the “sweet” one) during the spring fashion shows in Milan, Paris, and New York. A short Lifetime TV special filmed at the same time did show Turlington trudging from fitting to fitting, generally providing a so-so look at her professional work. This feature film version—strictly for hardcore fashion fans—is far less focused. It flits from show to show, with a snatch of banal supermodel chitchat here and a peek at designer egotism there. Anyone with half an eye cocked toward House of Style has seen it all before. (Arrow)—MICHAEL GULTZ
