Craig Ferguson's Britney Monologue

The Associated Press reports on how Craig Ferguson DIDN'T make fun of Britney Spears in his monologue last night. But they didn't really capture the riveting, sincere sermon Ferguson delivered. He's really grown on me over the last year and Ferguson's opening chats are always rambling, personal affairs. Last night, he was impassioned, talking about his battles with alcoholism and urging Spears to get some help via some tough love comments about her having two kids but being a child, a 25 year old child. The only thing I can compare it to are Keith Olbermann's gripping essays on MSNBC. It was personal and moving and funny, sort of like that scene from "Network" if the guy hadn't gone insane. Good stuff.

It's interesting that the guy whose name wasn't on the list at the Playboy Superbowl party should end up having more class than any of those whose names were on the list. And he even jokes about that. Craig is the guy who can change the face of late night television... and remind us, in the process, that we really do have a moral conscience.
